ULTIMATE QUALITY AT A REASONABLE PRICE

Medical Mary's commitment to quality begins long before our products are bottled...with dedicated family farmers in Oregon and Kentucky, the lifeblood of our business.

Our hemp is the finest in the world, unlike the questionably sourced plants used by some of our competitors. And unlike our competitors, we use a unique, proprietary extraction method.

WHY IS THAT IMPORTANT?

Because today's CBD industry is largely unsupervised. The truth is, you never know what you're getting with some of our competitors. They may claim they're selling CBD oil, but it's often just unrefined hemp oil with unreliable quantities of cannabidiol.

At Medical Mary, you get what you see on the bottle, guaranteed. We're certified, third-party tested, and stand behind the effectiveness of our products.

And because we're a high-volume company, we can offer the lowest prices available.

Here is the bottom line:

- No one beats us on quality
- No one beats us on price

If you think you found an exception, let us know and we'll make things right.

CBD/HEMP EXTRACT GUIDE

What is CBD?

CBD is an abbreviation for cannabidiol, a chemical compound that belongs to a class of chemicals called phytocannabinoids. It's found naturally in hemp and marijuana, along with over 100 other phytocannabinoids, including tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, the psychoactive component of marijuana.

While both hemp and marijuana are members of the same species their cannabinoid profiles are significantly different. The major difference is the relative proportions of CBD and THC they contain.

Generally speaking, hemp is high in CBD but low in THC. Marijuana is low in CBD but high in THC.

People who are after the temporary euphoric feeling known as a high, smoke or ingest marijuana. People who take hemp oil or CBD, on the other hand, want to enjoy the wide range of health benefits associated with CBD, including relief from chronic pain, anxiety, sleeplessness, and other common ailments.

CBD products will not give users a high because there's not enough THC in the hemp plant to produce the effect. Keep in mind that though hemp contains an abundance of CBD, the compound is found primarily in the leaves and flowers, not the stalks or seeds. This is why it's crucial to choose a CBD product extracted from the entire plant.

Full-Spectrum CBD

A Full-Spectrum CBD product contains all the healthful phytocannabinoids the hemp plant contains. It does contain THC, although only in trace amounts (less than 0.3%).

Broad Spectrum CBD

Most often this term is used to designate CBD products that include all the phytocannabinoids in the hemp plant, except THC. Broad Spectrum products provide most of what's known as the "entourage effect," a term that refers to the synergistic power phytocannabinoids provide when working together in the body.

Isolate CBD

Cannabidiol can be refined down to the single molecule. In other words, pure CBD. Many people can't take the risk of ingesting even a trace of THC, usually because they fear failing a drug test.

Full-Spectrum, Broad Spectrum or Isolate – Which is More Effective?

Groundbreaking research from Israel published in 2015 concluded that the synergistic effects of a full spectrum cannabinoid profile are superior. The study concluded that full-spectrum CBD/Hemp was more effective in the treatment of inflammatory conditions in mice than molecule CBD/Hemp isolate.

This full spectrum benefit is commonly referred to as the 'entourage effect'. There are many users who don't want to ingest any THC at all. Until recently an isolated form of CBD/Hemp was the only option for these users.

Today, however, broad-spectrum products have entered the market, allowing this group to enjoy the health benefits of the entourage effect. These products offer maximum therapeutic potential without the risk of THC exposure.
